Shelley Rudman, Amy Williams, Kristan Bromley and Adam Pengilly were today unveiled as the final selections for Team GB ahead of the Winter Olympics in Vancouver. The skeleton athletes completed the British team, which consists of 52 athletes from six sports and 11 disciplines.

"Team GB has a fantastic record in skeleton, and these names really do inspire anybody who loves Olympic sport," said the BOA chef de mission, Andy Hunt. "We have four truly world-class athletes here including Shelley Rudman who won our only medal at the last Olympic Winter Games. They reflect exactly what it takes to get to the top of sport – talent, dedication, energy, focus and competitive spirit. I am sure each of them will rise to the occasion on the biggest stage of all.

"This is the biggest team we've sent to an Olympic Winter Games since Albertville in 1992, and we are ready to take on the world."

Rudman said: "I have very special memories of the Olympic Winter Games, and the silver medal I won in Turin four years ago was the greatest moment I've had in sport. But my appetite to succeed remains as strong as ever, and I'm going hoping that it all comes together and that luck is on my side.
